

Continuous run time is a key factor in determining the cost effectiveness of a modular biopower system. For each hour the system is running, it is converting low cost biomass into useable energy that can displace conventional energy (save energy cost) or be exported into the grid (increase revenues).

By extending the length of a run, it also reduces the need for labor to either operate or maintain the systems (saves operating cost).